

Gov. Phil (Tax Everything) Murphy is Taxing the Rain

He is poised to sign a "rain tax" bill passed by the state legislature in January... And lots of taxpayers are howling with rage!

"Every time you think there's nothing left to tax, we come up with something else," Assemblyman Hal Wirths (R-Morris-Sussex) exploded during a debate on the measure.

The law allows each of the state's 565 municipalities to set up its own public storm water utility. The new bureaucracies will build and manage sewer systems to treat pollutant-filled stormwater runoff. The infrastructure could cost billions, state authorities say.

Under the law, the utilities can levy steep fees on properties with large parking lots, long driveways, or big buildings which create the most runoff.

The state would scoop up 5% of all the proceeds.

Stop Laughing: The EPA is Actually Very Serious About Capturing Cow Farts

This part of the outline of Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez's infamous "Green New Deal" provoked laughter all across the country and weeks of ridicule on every social media platform including the DEVILer. But here's the truth: the (EPA) has spent millions of research and development dollars during the course of the 21st. century in a quest to figure out how to do exactly that.

For example, on Dec. 5, 2008, CBS News ran a report headlined "EPA's Air Pollution Target: Flatulent Cows". The story reports on farmers' concerns about a newly-issued EPA report that seemed to propose a literal tax on cow farts.

A report on April 11, 2014 details GOP concerns that the Obama EPA led by Gina McCarthy was also considering implementing a new tax on cow flatulence. The concern was then based on the Obama-era "Climate Action Plan" that would enact penalties on the agricultural industry unless it found ways to reduce methane emissions—which in fact far outstrip similar emissions from the natural gas industry by 25% by the year 2020.

Then, in August 2016, the Obama-era EPA issued the results of a new, very costly study that names farming and ranching as the single biggest emitter of CO2 in the US, and estimates potential of the livestock sector is 267 million metric tons of carbon dioxide equivalent in 2030 or fully 10% of U.S. baseline emissions.

Folks, I'm not blowing wind here! That's a lot of cow farts the EPA was planning on eliminating.

So, laugh all you want at Cortez and her insane Green New Deal's plan to capture cow farts, but do so armed with the knowledge that she is deadly serious, and that the bureaucrats at your EPA are serious about it as well, having spent the last 20 years wasting millions of your taxpayer dollars studying ways to do exactly that.
