

The partially-preserved creature was discovered by a shocked Delaware Bay crabber from near Bay Point, NJ as he was picking taaberries near the Carranza Memorial. (Pine Barrens)

It resembles a small dinosaur, but since flightless dinosaurs have been extinct for 65 million years, scientists are struggling to identify it. The remains have now been sent for analysis, including carbon dating, which will reveal its age.

The roving Jersey DEVILer Newspaper reporter talked with Dr. Michael Walter, retired chicken sexor who is now pursuing a PhD in Paleontology. The following interview was conducted at his laboratory and bar located in Edisto Island, South Carolina.

Dr. Walter said, "It looks like a dinosaur and smells like a bunker, but we can't say anything until all the tests are done. It does make sense that this specimen is some form of bird, as it's already well understood that many birds have skeletons that look an awful lot like dinosaur fossils. Whether this is a bird that's been commonly documented, or a new species that's never been seen before, is more difficult to say for certain - if this is a new discovery, it explains that it was preserved, and the slow rotting process that the specimen has undergone has ended up making it look a lot more like a dinosaur than it would do under normal conditions."

After a few more cans of Budweiser and a quick trip to the men's room, he continued, "Only time will tell what this creature really was when it was alive, but the answers to the questions surrounding its life, death, and discovery, ought to prove fascinating for those who wish they could have their own pet velociraptors.... please pour me another shot of blackberry brandy."

I bought a pair of those memory foam insoles for my shoes and tried them out when I got home.

They fit perfectly in my shoes, but when I walked into the kitchen, I still couldn't remember why I went in there.

Frank of South Harrison Twp.

A telemarketer calls, "I would like to speak with Mister Mouse, please."

The homeowner reluctantly replies, "I suppose that would be possible, but it seems rather strange."

The telemarketer responds, "Why would that be?"

The homeowner answers, "This is the first time we've ever had a call for the cat."

The April Fools Prank of All Time

The Swiss Spaghetti Harvest April 1, 1957:

The respected BBC news show Panorama announced that thanks to a very mild winter and the virtual elimination of the dreaded spaghetti weevil, Swiss farmers were enjoying a bumper spaghetti crop.

It accompanied this announcement with footage of Swiss peasants pulling strands of spaghetti down from trees. Huge numbers of viewers were taken in. Many called the BBC wanting to know how they could grow their own spaghetti tree.

To this the BBC diplomatically replied, 'place a sprig of spaghetti in a tin of tomato sauce and hope for the best.'

Even the director-general of the BBC later admitted that after seeing the show he checked in an encyclopedia to find out if that was how spaghetti actually grew (but the encyclopedia had no information on the topic).

This broadcast remains, by far, the most popular and widely acclaimed April Fool's Day hoax ever, making it an easy pick for number one.
